SUBJECT: NIGERIAN SENATE RECEIVES LIST OF MINISTERIAL NOMINEES

ABUJA 00001446 001.2 OF 003

Classified By: Acting Political Counselor Heather Merritt for Reasons 1
.4 (b and d).

¶1. (C) SUMMARY: The Nigerian Senate received a list of 34 ministerial nominees from President Yar'adua on July 5 after weeks of public speculation and security vetting. The list, which does not include any reference to portfolios, is comprised predominantly of technocrats, politicians, and party officials, and includes four former Obasanjo administration ministers. Most of the nominees on the current ministerial list are uncontroversial and are likely to be confirmed without difficulty. However, some nominees may be substituted in coming weeks to assuage inter and intra-party wrangling. END SUMMARY

¶2. (C) The Nigerian Senate received a list of 34 ministerial nominees from President Yar'adua on July 5. The press in the weeks immediately prior claimed at least four lists were in circulation and that the Nigerian Executive had been keeping the list close-hold until nominees were announced on the Senate floor. Observers had expected the Senate, which reconvened on June 25 after a three week recess, to receive the list early the previous week. President Yar'adua, however, said he delayed submitting the list to the Senate to allow Nigerian law enforcement and security services to perform security background investigations on the ministerial candidates. The Senate will begin ministerial confirmation hearings on July 10.

¶3. (C) The nomination process began in late May when Yar'adua required each state governor to submit to the Presidency three names. President Yar'adua then selected from among these to form his list of ministerial nominees. Political observers expressed concern that the list would be heavily skewed towards former state governors and advisers of former President Obasanjo.

¶4. (C) The list released on July 5 is comprised predominantly of technocrats, politicians, and party officials, and includes four former Obasanjo administration ministers. It does not make any reference to what portfolios each minister will occupy. With the exception of these few notable former ministers and high-level technocrats, most of the nominees are relative unknowns. No former state governors are among the nominees and Benue, Jigawa, Kebbi, and Kaduna States are not yet represented among the ministerial candidates. Gombe and Kano States have two candidates each.

Comment:

¶39. (C) Most of the nominees on the current ministerial list are uncontroversial and are likely to be confirmed without difficulty. However, some nominees may be substituted in coming weeks to assuage inter and intra-party wrangling as political parties agreeing to participate in the Government of National Unity (GNU) seek representation in Federal Government ministries. Furthermore, some state governors may balk at certain selections leaving their states' ministerial slots vacant, either because they are unsatisfied with President Yar'adua's nominee or pressured by local party members to select a consensus candidate. Nominees that are former ministers are from the North and are not seen as Obasanjo cronies, and there are few PDP stalwarts on the list, which helps to ease concerns that Obasanjo would attempt to stack the ministries with his supporters.
